

HOME, ITS PROBLEMS AND INTERESTS

AN EFFECTIVE EVENING GOWN.

In this gown are displayed some of the old-time fashions. The material is pale blue messaline, and the skirt is very full, clinging about the hips and swaying with correct Victorian absurdity at the hem. Five three-inch ruffles trim the bottom, and the lining is white chiffon over pale blue liberty satin. The blouse has a charming quaintness employing the once popular surplice neck. Folds of the material are drawn prettily over the pointed front and fasten on left side. Deep cream lace finishes the neck, and the elbow sleeves are trimmed with a double ruffle of messaline.

SHOPLAND.

There is absorbing lamp magnificence. One may have a big bisque elephant for $3.00.

Rugs from the Orient are among the temptations.

Velours chiffon costumes stand for sartorial richness.

Every store vies with the other in the matter of bonbons.

A fur tie is recommended to complete the smart promenade costume.

The fullness of fall time is to be noted at its best in the fruiterer's costume.

Sometimes a fashion is exclusive because it is so ugly no one will copy it.

Broadcloths are certainly the hand-somest of the cloths offered this season.

A white cloth evening coat of Chinese cut is deeply faced with snowy Arctic fox.

Bargain furniture is gradually passing, while holiday gifts grow in importance daily.

Nothing is more surprising than the softness and light weight of the new velveteens.

Magnificent is a new wallpaper showing great clusters of blue grapes on a glittering gold ground.

Silk petticoats are ornate nearly to the knees. One should beware of all save flat trimmings at this height, as they bungle the outer skirt.

Personality in Their Hats.

Every civilized nation of women has its distinctive way of putting on its hats and looks either dowdy or ridiculous if it ape the other. English women often wear their hats larger in the crown than would be tolerated by an American, who would feel like a candle with an extinguisher on top in one of the hats that sink down over the head.

An English girl will pull all her hair tight out of her neck into a wad on the crown of her head, and then elap a sailor hat on top. Ten to one she will look charming, too. A French or American girl would look absurd in such a rig. French women are given to up-on-one-side-and-down-on-the-other effects, a style which suits them to a T. Americans as a rule use their hair more intelligently than the others, making it frame their faces so as to enhance tremendously the effect of their headgear.

Men Should See—

That they have left their newspapers scattered over the floor.

That cigar ashes have to be cleaned up.

That sofa cushions have to be rearranged after a nap.

That yesterday's clothing has to be hung up.

That boots and overshoes have to be kept in place.

That there are hundreds of little things that husbands could do to lighten the work of the home.

That by so doing both husband and wife would be happier.

The Splendid Veil.

Drapery veils are made of pompadour gauze, bordered by triple bands of narrow black velvet ribbon.

TOLD IN A LINE OR TWO

The Gist of Present Day Modes and Tendencies.

The erinoline is more than hinted at. Brocades of our grandmother's days are revived for evening wear.

The vivid trimming touches of this winter make frocks conspicuous.

Exquisite shades of prune are swag-gest newcomers for street gowns.

Picturesque reigns supreme in evening gown fashions.

Lace flounces over chiffon become doubly effective.

The ante-bellum pointed bodice is again revived.

Lace dyed to match the material has lost favor.

Heavy and light laces combined are desirable trimming.

Hats run to extremes—exceedingly large or quite small.

Wide skirts, big sleeves, and picture hats mark the elaborate costumes.

Medium skirt and sleeves, plain three-quarter coat and small hat, mark the tailor costume.

Fancy waistcoats, in bright contrasting colors, are a feature of the street costume.

Wide shoulders and long shoulder seams still prevail.

Light weight materials for winter house wear are favored more with each return of the season.

Muffs are as large as for several past seasons.

Marabout is the odd trimming seen on fancy chiffon neckpieces.

There is a tendency toward the small waist.

Light colors are smartest for dinner gowns.

Narrow gold braid, in bow-knots, is effective on black gowns.

New poplins are softer and lighter in weight than those of yore.

Quaint and old-fashioned in effect are the box pleated ruchings of taffeta ribbon.

Furs are worn earlier each year.

Lace coats and jackets, long and short, are among the smartest novelties.

Yellow, orange, and pastel blue are the favored trimming shades.

Velvets and velveteens bear strong resemblance to old-time plush.

The long, all-enveloping, half-fitted coat is smartest for evening.

The elaborate trimming of the present style relegate plain black gowns to the background.

Louis coats, of pale brocade, with tulle skirts, are swager as bridesmaids' costumes.

The fad is to fasten all belts and bodices in front.

Lace chemisettes are prominent toilet adjuncts.

The newest back-combs are placed vertically.

Various shades of violet are particularly prominent in cloth costumes.

Displaying a chic frock made of novelty wool cloth, in shades of red, black and gold. The guimpe is of red tuckled silk. The trimming on the frock is heavy black silk braid, and the broad girle is of black satin.
